

PATRIOTS' DAY IS OBSERVED IN BOSTON

Times Wide World Photo.

William L. Joyce receiving his credentials from Mayor F. W. Mansfield yesterday, as he started on the "Paul Revere Ride."

'PAUL REVERE' RIDES, BUT FINDS NO HURLEY

Mixup in Cambridge Meeting Place Causes 'W. G. Dawes' to 'Sound Alarm' Twice

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
 BOSTON, April 19.—Paul Revere's companion, William G. Dawes, roused the countryside and sounded the alarm twice this morning in a re-enactment of the ride of 162 years ago.

The first dash was on the Patriots' Day schedule. The second was not. Sergeant Walter Martenson, who was acting the part of on the "Paul Revere Ride," no band, no reception committee, no band, nobody.

So, with his six escorts, he retreated, called the first trip a rehearsal, and a little later spread a new alarm. This time the reception committee was waiting.

Earlier, William L. Joyce, acting the part of Paul Revere, had had his own troubles. He dashed through the countryside, spreading his share of "The British are coming," and arrived at the reviewing stand at the site of the Sumner statue, near Harvard Square. There were no greeters.

Meanwhile Governor Hurley and several officials were waiting for him at Cambridge Common. Finally Joyce dashed up with enthusiasm and remarked that the Governor and his party were at the wrong post. The party then went to the proper place, and that was why

Dawes, arrived at Cambridge Com- | Sergeant Martenson, when it came
mon at the time set in advance, | his turn, could find no greeters.
but no one was there to greet him, | But a good time was had by all.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.